

Anticipating Law: The Prognostics of Fear and Hope #LawNet2017

written by Allegra
September, 2017

This week Allies will once again be in action - this time at the 2017 EASA LawNet Workshop in Bern on September 19-21! The workshop engages with numerous topical themes within legal anthropology and beyond via its theme “Anticipating Law”. It calls into view both anticipations of law—the hopes and fears people put into law—and the anticipatory laws that attempt to legally regulate the future.

Both anticipations of law and anticipatory laws are shaped by different forms of fear and hope – and this workshop explores what they look like.

Many laws are geared towards organising and regulating the future. Some of these pursue specific developmental goals ('Social engineering') and attempt to shape the future by giving incentives for achieving those goals; others are geared more specifically toward preventing future events and diminishing risk. Moreover, the regulation and prevention of events in the future is a legal field of increasing importance; this is related to rapid technological change that poses problems of unknown effects ever more frequently, think of Nanotechnology, Climate change, Robotics and the like (see Beck 1996).

The hopes of shaping the future by legal regulation have diminished in the face of the seemingly autonomous dynamics of distributed agency in a globalised world, and have given way to logics of prevention.

The regulation of the future is, of course, implicit in law generally, as law is based on the assumption that it orients action by people and thereby produces wanted outcomes in the future and prevents unwanted ones, by threat of sanction or by award of benefit. However, theories about law's effect on human action change. They change in accordance with changing understandings of safety and security and related ideas of what it needs to produce or safeguard social order. Whether thus preventive logics or those, which are confident about the possibilities of law to shape the future, prevail – in short: how hope and fear are inscribed in law – is a matter of social analysis.

This raises one strand of questions: how does law know the future? What techniques and technologies provide information about the future that is used by law? How are fear and hope inscribed in law?

A second strand of questions that is central to this workshop concerns anticipations of law by people subjected to it: Fear and hope that are implicit in law's making, are also central to the experience of law. Experiential and normative dimensions of expectations toward law are entangled in often contradictory ways, disappointments with law (from past encounters) not necessarily diminishing hope in it for the future. What is it precisely that inspires fear? Is it the same as what they put hope in? Or is "the law" that is feared a different one than that which they employ in hope in their various struggles and endeavours? What is it precisely that inspires hope in law, and how does it relate to other hopes and aspirations, to visions of the future?

Workshop will include presentations from a great number of legal anthropologists from Europe & beyond, namely:

Laura Bear (Keynote, LSE), Julia Eckert (U of Bern), Isabelle Schulte-Tenckhoff (Geneva Graduate Institute), Jane Cowan (U of Sussex), Julie Billaud (U of Sussex, Allegra Lab), Grégoire Mallard (Geneva Graduate Institute), Miia Halme-Tuomisaari (Geneva Graduate Institute, Allegra Lab), Anya Degenshein (Northwestern), Deniz Yonucu (Humboldt), Agathe Mora (U of Edinburgh), David Loher (U of Bern), Thomas van der Molen (SOAS), Irène Marti (U of Neuchâtel), Maya Avis (Geneva Graduate Institute), and Tobias Eule (U of Bern).

Stay tuned for LIVE UPDATES via hashtag #LawNet2017 at our FB, Twitter & Instagram – and join the debate!

2017 EASA Lawnet Workshop: Anticipating Law: The Prognostics of Fear and Hope

Date: 19-21 September 2017

Venue: Institute of Social Anthropology, University of Bern

Organisers: Prof. Dr. Julia Eckert, Prof. Dr. Tobias Eule, Dr. des. David Loher, and Dr. Miia Halme-Tuomisaari

Keynote: Public Goods: Anticipation, Capital and the Legal Regimes of Public

Private Partnerships, Prof. Dr. Laura Bear (LSE, London)

Programme:

[pdf-embedder

url="http://allegralaboratory.net/wp-content/uploads/2017/09/AnticipationWorkshop-updated.pdf" title="AnticipationWorkshop updated"]