

BIBLIOGRAPHY on Human Rights (Law) etc

Allegra

November, 2013

We feel that it has by now become evident what we hope to do with Allegra: to both highlight ongoing debates and create new ones, to experiment with different forms of scholarly representation – and just show the FUN of legal anthropology (and stuff)! Whereas all of our other categories ‘rock’ already, we admit to being a bit slow with ‘Publications’. This is not due to laziness or lack of consideration, rather the opposite. For this is a tricky nut to crack: just how do we navigate the avalanche of new things that keep on appearing all the time, all the time?! Trying to cover everything is impossible, and even a sensible overview would require almost full-time preoccupation.

And of course there is also the question: just what do we focus on? Existing publishing venues or the various experiments that are budding around us discussed among others by Tim Ingold? Admittedly, a fixed answer is unlikely, and instead we foresee ourselves progressing in the road of experiment – of highlighting the occasional new publication, of introducing a classic text, of discussing fresh takes on reviews – such as the great experiment ‘Page 99’. And also, throwing in the occasional bibliography from an ongoing project.

This time we offer you the last alternative. Please find below a bibliography connected to the project introduced via fieldnotes over the past weeks, focussing on (yet making no claims for comprehensiveness):
